

This black and white photograph shows an archaeological excavation of a pit or trench. The pit is lined with smooth, rounded stones and is filled with a dark, granular material. The surrounding soil is light-colored and appears to be a mix of sand and silt. Several circular features, possibly pits or postholes, are visible in the upper left quadrant. A scale bar with alternating black and white segments is placed horizontally below the pit. A small white label with black text is positioned near the bottom left corner of the pit.
